International Campaign for Tibet (ICT) and BBC reports described protests in Ngulra on March 16 and 17. A Tibetan told BBC of a candlelight vigil. ICT described peaceful political protest activity (shouting slogans, displaying the Tibetan flag) and violent activity (attacking government offices and vehicles). ICT reported on April 9 that about 30 of 95 persons (including monks) detained in Ngulra had been released. Xinhua reported on April 9 that officials released 1,870 of 2,644 Tibetans who surrendered to police or were detained by them for alleged rioting in Gannan. No information is available about Gedun Gyatso's protest activity, whether or not police released him, his place of detention, or criminal charges, if any, against him.

This is the first known sentencing in Yunnan province in connection to the '3.14 incident'. Gonpo Tsering was initially detained on March 23, 2008 by the Dechen TAP PSB under the suspicion of inciting 'splittism'. A PSB investigation determined that Gonpo Tsering sent "inflammatory emails and messages that distorted the facts and the true situation regarding social stability in the Tibetan area following the 'March 14 incident'" between March 16 and 18, 2008, violating Article 103(2) of the Criminal Law of the PRC. An appeal of the case was upheld by the Higher People's Court of Yunnan province on January 5, 2009. As noted by Dui Hua, it does not seem that Gonpo Tsering was represented by legal counsel during his appeal and possibly during his original trial.

Police took him to an unknown location in Lanzhou, Gansu's capital. Prior to that, PAP detained him on March 21 in Xiahe on suspicion that he participated in political protests a week earlier (he had not). Police interrogated, beat, and tortured him over a 2-month period at locations in Xiahe and Linxia city. He was hospitalized twice then released on bail after police forced him to fingerprint a statement saying that he had not been tortured. Jigme Gyatso posted on YouTube.com a video of himself recounting the experience. VOA featured the video in a September 3 report. Jigme Gyatso told AP in a September 13 telephone interview that police had accused him of speaking to foreign media and human rights groups and charged him with "illegally providing intelligence to such groups.

187	DET	Kalsang		格桑	Gesang	M	25	Chone	Kanlho TAP, Gansu		Monk	23-Mar-08			CECC: Based on a TCHRD prisoner list, on March 23, 2008, security officials in Zhuoni (Chone) county, Gannan (Kanlho) TAP, Gansu province, detained at least 25 Akhor Monastery monks for protesting on an unspecified date. It is not clear, however, whether "Akhor" is the correct name of the monastery. The Tibetan Government-in-exile reported that officials detained "many" monks of Chone's Tashi Choeling Monastery after they protested peacefully on March 23. China Digital Times reported that on March 16 monks protested at "many" Gannan TAP monasteries, including in Zhuoni, but that there were no "clashes;" on March 17, however, protesting students broke shop windows. Reuters reported that Zhuoni protesters damaged official buildings and property in "mid-March." Xinhua reported rioting during protests on March 14-19 in six Gannan counties, including Zhuoni. Details are not available about Kalsang's protest activity, place of detention, or charges, if any, against him.

When the body was released to the family there were clear signs of torture and brutal beatings. Paltsal Kyab's brother, Kalsang, who now lives in exile, told ICT that according to witnesses who saw his body, "The whole front of is body was completely bruised blue and covered with blisters from burns. His whole back was also covered in bruises, and there was not even a tiny spot of natural skin tone on his back and front torso.

They shouted slogans calling for Tibetan independence, the Dalai Lama's return to Tibet, and the Dalai Lama's long life. PSB and PAP personnel detained the nuns en route and beat some nuns severely. On May 18 or 19, officials detained Phurbu Tsering Rinpoche, a Tibetan reincarnated teacher who founded and headed Pangri nunnery and who was associated with Kardze Gepheling Monastery. He may have refused to cooperate with patriotic education instructors, according to RFA. The nuns were angered by patriotic education campaigns and demands by officials that the nuns denounce the Dalai Lama and (according to RFA) Phurbu Tsering. 577	DEC	Tendar				M	28	Lhasa	Lhasa Municipality, TAR		Lay person	14-Mar-08			Tendar, 28, died as a result of critical injuries sustained while in detention for trying to help an elderly monk during the March 14, 2008 protest in Lhasa. A video from Tibet which was later released by the Tibetan Government in Exile in March 2009 documented Tendar's injuries, including knife wounds, a nail that had been driven into a toenail in his right foot, an infected and rotting wound in his bottom where flesh had been cut away, and wounds on his back and face. A Tibetan source who was in Lhasa after the incident and spoke to Tibetans who know Tendar said that Tendar had been taken to hospital to treat injuries he sustained during his initial detention, but while in hospital, "a team of four to five Chinese security personnel visited him every four to six hours. During those times they took turns in beating him while interrogating him about his involvement [in the March 14 protests]. They were using iron rods and cigarette butts to burn his skin. He was tortured repeatedly and his condition deteriorated rapidly."
578															The same Tibetan source reported that Tendar had tried to commit suicide twice by jumping out of the window from his room, and believes that Tendar was only released to his family as the authorities knew there was no hope of his recovery and wanted to avoid being responsible for his death while he was under their charge. Tendar's family attempted to get medical care for him but hospitals were reluctant to take him into their care due to the political sensitivity of a patient who had been involved on March 14. Tendar was finally admitted to the People's Hospital near the Potala Palace, where he spent 20 days while his condition continued to deteriorate. He became unconscious, and medical staff told his family that there was nothing more they could do for him. Tendar's family had to pay a medical bill of 90,000 yuan ($13,000) before they could take him home. He died 13 days later, on June 19, 2008.

683	DET	Tsultrim Tenzin				M	74	Kardze	Kardze TAP, Sichuan		Monk, geshe	3-Apr-08			CECC: Based on RFA, TCHRD, and China Digital Times reports, on April 3, 2008, public security officials detained 74 year-old monk Tsultrim Tenzin and 26 year-old lay person Tsultrim Phuntsog at Tongkor Monastery, located in Ganzi (Kardze) county, Ganzi TAP, Sichuan province. A "patriotic education" work team arrived at the monastery on April 2 and ordered the monks to denounce the Dalai Lama. The monks refused. On April 3, police and People's Armed Police arrived at Tongkor to search monastic quarters, confiscate cell phones, and remove or destroy photos of the Dalai Lama and Tongkor's head lama. Police detained Tsultrim Tenzin, who holds the title of Geshe, signifying the highest level of monastic academic achievement, when he tried to stop officials from throwing photos away. Later on April 3, PAP opened fire on monks and lay persons protesting the detentions, killing up to 15 persons. No details are available about the men's place of detention or criminal charges, if any, against them.

Detained for a second time on April 13, 2008 for one month by Sangchu county police and released on May 14, 2008. Tsundue Gyatso was tortured and interrogated for six days while in detention according to a source who spoke with him upon his release. Afterwards, "his mentality became very strange and he didn't want to listen and be in contact with anyone. He didn't even have any interest in meeting with his parents and friends, he was a completely different person due to the brutality he experienced in prison. After a few months he got a lot better and small smiles began appearing on his face again."
686															Tsundue Gyatso and Sonam Gyatso were detained again on May 15, 2009 at Labrang monastery and are believed to be held at Mankar prison in Sangchu county, but no one can say for sure. According to the Tibetan Center for Human Rights and Democracy, the Tsundue and Sonam Gyatso's family was told by local public security officials that the two were being interrogated due to their alleged involvement in protests at Labrang monastery in 2008, but were not told where the monks were being held.
